Bush planned Iraq war in Dec. 2001, says book

WASHINGTON, April 22 — A book by a former senior aide to President George W. Bush says the president planned to launch a war against Iraq in December 2001, even though the United States had no evidence at the time that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction.

The book, "The Road to 9/11: How the Bush Administration Failed America," by Michael R. Gordon, a former senior aide to the president, says that Bush and his top advisers were convinced that Iraq was a major threat to the United States and that a war was necessary to remove Saddam Hussein from power.

Gordon says that Bush and his advisers were aware of the fact that the United States had no evidence at the time that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction, but they believed that the risk was worth taking.

The book also says that Bush and his advisers were aware of the fact that the United States had no evidence at the time that Iraq possessed weapons of mass destruction, but they believed that the risk was worth taking.

What nuclear warlike blow does Israel

By Ron Klagsberg

TEL AVIV, April 22 — Israel's military has launched a series of strikes against targets in Iraq, including a missile launch site, a command and control center, and a communications center. The strikes were part of a larger operation aimed at weakening Iraq's military capabilities.

The Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) said that the strikes were successful and that they had destroyed several key targets. The IDF also said that it had no intention of escalating the conflict with Iraq.

The strikes came in response to Iraq's recent missile attacks on Israel. Iraq launched several Scud missiles at Israel in the past few weeks, causing significant damage and casualties.

Against All Enemies

By David

David is a senior editor at the New York Times.

It is a rare moment in American history when the president of the United States is so widely respected. Barack Obama, who has been in office for less than a year, is the most popular president since Franklin D. Roosevelt. His approval rating is at its highest since the end of World War II. This is a testament to his leadership and the support of the American people.

Obama's success is a result of his ability to connect with the American people. He has shown a deep understanding of the challenges facing the country and a commitment to addressing them. His leadership has inspired a sense of hope and optimism in the American people.

Children with autism spectrum disorders (ASD) are often characterized by repetitive and stereotyped behaviors, such as hand flapping, rocking, and spinning. These behaviors are often used to self-soothe or to cope with sensory overload. However, these behaviors can also be disruptive and interfere with learning and social interactions. This study aimed to investigate the effectiveness of a behavioral intervention program designed to reduce these repetitive behaviors in children with ASD. The program was based on the principles of applied behavior analysis (ABA) and involved the use of positive reinforcement to encourage the child to engage in more socially appropriate behaviors. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in reducing the frequency and intensity of the repetitive behaviors in the children who participated in it. The children who received the program showed a significant decrease in the number of hand flaps, rockings, and spins compared to the control group. These findings suggest that the program may be a useful tool for helping children with ASD to manage their repetitive behaviors and improve their social and academic functioning.

The Summer I took to the skies

RESULTS

1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

Findings

Abstract

First Middle School students learn.

Kids can learn skills at home

120 The summer months offer a great time for children to learn new skills.

By the time summer rolls around, many children have already learned a great deal about the world around them. They have learned to read, to write, to count, and to solve problems. They have also learned to share, to cooperate, and to be responsible. These are all skills that are essential for a successful life. And the best time to learn these skills is during the summer months, when there are no school assignments or tests to worry about. This is a time when children can learn at their own pace, and when they can learn from the people they love most. So, if you have a child who is interested in learning, why not let them learn during the summer? It's a great way to spend the time, and it's a great way to help your child grow.

To be young, gifted and depressed

By Cathy Babao Guballa
Contributor

LIKE the proverbial thief in the night, suicide shatters every family that it touches. Most so when it is a teenager who passes away.

When suicide takes place, everyone—friends, family, classmates—is left grappling, trying to make sense of the tragedy that has suddenly taken place.

Recent months have shown an alarming rise in the number of adolescent and young adult suicides, their stories often exaggerated, circulating around the schools and universities where these young people once belonged to.

Then there are the suicides which are made public due to the nature or stature of the families involved.

Suicide is defined as the decision to deliberately end one's life. In the United States, suicide is the second leading cause of death among children and adolescents. In the Philippines, according to Dr. Lita Espinosa-Rondain, a psychiatrist at the Makati Medical Center and Center for Family Ministries (Cefam) at the Ateneo de Manila University, statistics show that completed suicide more often than not takes place among 16- to 27-year-olds, and that 37 percent of suicide attempts are completed.

Rondain adds that the most common methods used are those of hanging and poisoning. Peak periods are reported to be during Christmas, February and the opening of a new school year.

"There are much more stressors and expectations, especially when it comes to adolescent relationships, during these periods," Rondain explains.

Myths about suicide

She further cites several myths associated with teen suicide.

The first myth is that people who talk about or threaten suicide don't really mean it. "Parents and friends need to be sensitive and should take this kind of talk seriously," she stresses.

It is also untrue that suicides frequently occur out of the blue, that thoughts of suicide are temporary states of mind, and that whatever crisis young people will go through will pass.

"More often than not, the suicide has long been considered and there has been a period of depression prior to it. Again, the people around the adolescent need to be sensitive to the signs and signals being given," says Rondain.

Lastly, it is a myth that suicide attempts won't be repeated again because of shame. Rondain says statistics show that four out of five—indeed, a high rate—try again.

"Closer monitoring is really a must for those who have been caught attempting suicide. Just because you were able to catch it [the first time] doesn't mean [the suicidal person] is already safe," she says.

Cordova study

Noted clinical psychologist and University of the Philippines professor Dr. Ma. Lourdes Arellano-Cordova recently wrote a paper about the family dynamics of Filipino adolescents in crisis.

Parents need to listen closely to the songs of young people to get a clearer picture of the 'secret' world of troubled adolescents

In one part of her paper, the zeroes in on families with adolescent suicides. Cordova based her findings on an in-depth multiple case study of the dynamics of five Filipino families with completed suicides written by Cordova for an unpublished master's thesis at the Ateneo in 2000.

She says, "In the families studied, the teenagers who killed themselves could be said to be the ones who embodied the family myth or the ones who followed their parents' covert rules and wanted to fulfill their dreams. They were considered a favorite or considered as an ideal son/daughter. They also served as confidantes of their mothers. These indicate that they functioned as family caretakers. This finding concurs with the concept of tagasalo."

In other words, these young people wanted to help the family in some way and make their parents happy, but felt they failed.

Carandang also says they had at least one parent who had a very difficult childhood, and at least one parent who did not express emotions, is very strict, and was a perfectionist and very difficult to please.

"Fear was used to discipline the children and all made use of physical punishment," Carandang says. Most of them had children who kept secrets from the family and the family had members who did not discuss problems and conflicts with each other. All considered school/academic success a very important.

A salient observation that Carandang makes is that the family where the adolescent suicide takes place is often closed and isolated, and not connected with outsiders.

"The adolescent... is at that stage where he or she wants to explore, to seek autonomy, to separate from parents and seek outside connections, [but] then feels trapped and sees no other way out," she says.

Steps to take

She suggests that parents listen closely to the songs of the youth so as to get a clearer picture of their child's "inner sanctum," the "secret" world of the troubled adolescent.

"Their songs are often masked by loud melodies, but if you pay closer attention to the lyrics, you will better understand what goes on in their hearts," Carandang notes.

Rondain suggests that if a parent or a friend suspects a potential suicide case, it is best to trust one's suspicions and seek help.

"Tell the person that you are worried and listen to what s/he has to say. Ask direct questions and if there is a plan, but don't act

To be young, gifted and depressed

BY JENNIFER H. KURTZ
 As the world's youngest and most brilliant minds grow up, they face a unique set of challenges. They are often gifted, talented and creative, but they also face a higher risk of depression and anxiety. This is because they are often "high achievers" who are expected to excel in everything they do. They are often the first in their families to go to college, and they are often the first to get a job. They are often the first to get married, and they are often the first to have children. They are often the first to die.

But there is hope. There are many ways to help these young people. One way is to provide them with a supportive environment. This means having people who understand them and who can help them when they are in trouble. Another way is to provide them with a sense of purpose. This means helping them to find a career or a hobby that they are passionate about. A third way is to provide them with a sense of community. This means helping them to find a group of people who share their interests and who can support them when they are in trouble.

Telltale signs and what to do

It's hard to know if your child is depressed. But there are some signs that can help you tell. These signs include: changes in eating and sleeping habits, loss of interest in activities, changes in mood, and changes in behavior. If you notice any of these signs, it's important to talk to your child's doctor. The doctor can help you figure out what's going on and what to do about it.

Depression is a serious illness, but it can be treated. The first step is to talk to your doctor. The doctor can help you figure out what's going on and what to do about it. There are many treatments for depression, including medication and therapy. It's important to find a treatment that works for you.

It's important to remember that depression is not a weakness. It's a medical condition that can affect anyone. If you or your child is depressed, there is hope. There are many ways to get help, and there are many people who can help you. Don't give up. There is a way out.
